When business needs and daily schedules just won't work with standard freight delivery times by 5 p.m., FedEx Freight A.M. allows customers to start ahead and stay ahead. It has made thousands of customers even more confident in FedEx Freight services, like the no-fee money-back guarantee and FedEx Freight Advance Notice[®], which have set the company apart from competitors in the crowded field of LTL carriers. These services offer customers peace of mind, while underscoring the company's confidence in its people, technology and network to get the job done. It is this same level of confidence that brings FedEx Freight A.M. to the marketplace.

Get ahead of your competition

Scheduling a FedEx Freight A.M. shipment is easy with multiple ways to quickly request this service for your shipments and, with an easy-to-manage $75 up charge, customers can instantly schedule and ship at the speed of their business. No need to call ahead or request pricing. By making it easy to request FedEx Freight A.M., shippers can harness the power of the FedEx Freight network for the growth and success of their business, by providing their customers a faster and more specific freight delivery time.

Streamline your freight flow

Customers are used to the fast, reliable freight delivery of other FedEx Freight services, such as FedEx Freight Regional[®] for next- and second-day delivery, FedEx Freight[®] Extended for accelerated three-day or more services and FedEx Freight[®] Customized Solutions for more unique shipment needs. Now FedEx Freight A.M. is the solution for earlier freight delivery on the standard delivery date, allowing customers to improve freight flow and operational efficiencies.

Customer success — Omni Cable delivers

Omni Cable's vision statement is to DELIVER, and by establishing FedEx Freight A.M. as an extension of its freight solutions, Omni Cable can now offer greater control and faster delivery to its customers.

As corporate operations manager for Omni Cable, Keith Stewart understands the value of reliable service. Omni Cable's customers, comprised of electrical distributors, often depend on time-sensitive LTL (less-than-truckload) shipments arriving when they're expected.

When Keith's team fills a freight order and determines the best way to deliver it, FedEx Freight often gets the call. It's an excellent business relationship that's grown over seven years. "We first chose FedEx Freight because it offered some of the best service times in the industry," says Keith. "And that's what our own customers have always expected: fast and reliable service."

"FedEx Freight A.M. really works well for our industry and our business," Keith explains. "It gives us a chance to make our own services better and more reliable than what's offered by our competitors."

Keith says the time-definite LTL service has become a great selling point for Omni Cable sales professionals. Next-day or second-day morning delivery backed by a money-back guarantee from the company's 10 distribution centers helps make Omni a formidable competitor across the country. "A good example is the 600-plus mile Atlanta to St. Louis lane," explains Keith. "We can tell a customer that we'll get their LTL shipment to them before 10:30 the next day and that's impressive."

A feature Keith also appreciates is that FedEx Freight A.M. is easy to request with no special calls or other arrangements needed. And with its flat rate, the service is reasonably priced.

FedEx Freight A.M. is just the latest example of how FedEx Freight constantly looks for ways to enhance its services to meet the needs of customers who want to get a head start on the day's business, get ahead of the competition and streamline their freight flow. To Keith and thousands of others, that's what FedEx is all about.
